Course description

Children need the significant adults in their lives—parents, teachers, caregivers—to provide them with the two “L-words” of Love and Leadership. In the case of Love, it must be unconditional. In the case of Leadership, it must be unequivocal. The effective transmission of these qualities form the foundation of a child’s sense of well-being and promote the greatest degree of social and emotional health as well as optimal levels of achievement. In this often-humorous yet provocative and thought-provoking seminar, family psychologist John Rosemond describes contemporary parenting, ever-increasing degrees of parental micromanagement and its effects seen in the “family-friendly” dental practice.

Objectives:

1. Understand the contemporary parenting conundrum in clear, compelling terms and then describes a practical, tested solution
2. Understand how to motivate maximum child compliance, no matter the setting, by using “leadership speech.”
